

I strongly urge the FCC to limit the number of media outlets that may be owned by any one entity. There is already too much centralization of ownership of media outlets, with the result that there are too few truly independent voices participating in public discourse. The continued health of our democracy requires that competing points of view be heard, and such competition is impossible when many seemingly distinct media sources are actually controlled by one entity.